it has also been estimated that as many as 30–40% of rejected donor lungs could have been safely implanted if appropriate preservation and resuscitation techniques were utilized.